So you want to be a climate advocate...

Our voices hold immense power in our collective climate fight, and it’s up to us to speak up for critical climate policies and legislation. Here are some tips on how you can use your voice to advocate for climate action.

Ask yourself what you care about.
Take time to figure out what the most important issues are to you. Do you care about clean energy? Maybe you care about climate justice?

Find out who represents you.
We all have local, state, and federal representatives based on our zip code. These elected officials are invested in speaking for the people they represent, so they are your audience for making change.

Do your research.
Learn more about the issues you care about, your elected official’s voting or legislative history, and whether or not they are a co-sponsor of a relevant bill. If there is existing legislation addressing the issue you care about, research its content and impact.

Make the connection.
Contact your elected official with the knowledge you have gained. You can mail a handwritten letter, send an email, call their office, or even use pre-written templates, like the ones on our Advocacy Action Center, online.

Learn more at:
massaudubon.org/climate

Mass Audubon