Mass Audubon works to protect the nature of Massachusetts for people and wildlife. Together with more than 100,000 members, we care for 35,000 acres of conservation land, provide school, camp, and other educational programs for 225,000 children and adults annually, and advocate for sound environmental policies at local, state, and federal levels. Founded in 1896 by two inspirational women who were committed to the protection of birds, Mass Audubon has grown to become a powerful force for conservation in New England. Today we are respected for our sound science, successful advocacy, and innovative approaches to connecting people and nature. Each year, our statewide network of wildlife sanctuaries welcomes nearly half a million visitors of all ages, abilities, and backgrounds and serves as the base for our work. To support these important efforts, call 800-AUDUBON (800-283-8266) or visit www.massaudubon.org.

Dear Members and Friends,

As we reflect on another successful year, we wish to share our deep appreciation for all that you do to strengthen, grow, and sustain Mass Audubon. We wouldn't be where we are today without the support of an extraordinary group of donors, members, friends, and volunteers whose commitment and generosity make it possible to protect the nature of Massachusetts for people and wildlife—thank you!

But, this is no ordinary year. This December, we will transition out of our roles as Chairman of the Board and as President, knowing that Mass Audubon is as strong, as vibrant, and as relevant as ever—continuing on a path of achievement and impact. Indeed, that path has guided this organization for 116 years, and we are fortunate to have followed in the footsteps of great leaders whose work has helped us to pave the way to a bright future.

The stories and images that fill the pages of this Annual Report illustrate the consistent focus and consistent success of our organization. They are noteworthy examples of Mass Audubon's relevance through changing times, our unwavering dedication to mission, and the steadfast support of contributors, like you, who make it all possible.

We are honored to have been a part of this story with you.

With many thanks and best wishes for the future,

Laura A. Johnson

Hope for Vulnerable Species

The hatching of a bald eagle chick at Mass Audubon's Arcadia Wildlife Sanctuary provided a touch of magic over Earth Day weekend this year. Throngs of visitors from the Pioneer Valley and beyond converged on the Easthampton sanctuary to observe the downy newborn and its parents.

Sadly, this latest addition to our eagle population survived only a month, but the larger picture shows one of conservation's great success stories. And it underscores Mass Audubon's long-standing conviction that conservation is best achieved through a combination of strategies.

In 1960, bald eagles were on the Federal Endangered Species List (mainly as a result of DDT poisoning) and had not bred in Massachusetts for decades.

Then, in 1982, Mass Audubon partnered with the Massachusetts Division of Fisheries and Wildlife and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to reintroduce the bald eagle in the Quabbin wilderness. The outcome: As of 2011, 22 eagle nests throughout the state had produced 37 chicks that survived through fledging.

Conservation is best achieved through a combination of strategies.

Certainly, the bald eagle chick at Arcadia is a natural wonder that represents what we can accomplish when we work together. Through education, advocacy, and hands-on conservation, we helped rescue this national treasure from the brink of extinction.

It is in this tradition, and with the support of our dedicated donors, members, and volunteers, that Mass Audubon will continue the fight for the vulnerable species included in our recently published State of the Birds report.

Saving Sibley Farm

Sibley Farm in Spencer is a gem, encompassing more than 350 acres of open space just outside of the city of Worcester. Last spring, after two years of negotiation, planning, and lining up town and state financial support, we were presented with the ultimate challenge: raise the final $650,000 needed to purchase the property by June or risk losing it to development.

What happened next continues to amaze us. More than 400 generous individuals from across the state stepped up and donated money to ensure the historic property's permanent protection. And just when we thought we'd seen it all, the students at Central Tree Middle School in Rutland took it to the next level.

Led by life sciences teacher Chris Stark, students from the school's seventh- and eighth-grade classes visited Sibley Farm on multiple occasions, taking pictures and asking questions of Mass Audubon staff. Back in the classroom, they combined their own original artwork with the facts about the property to create Sibley Farm postcards, which they then sold and distributed to local businesses around town. All proceeds from sales were donated to the Sibley Farm campaign—which reached its fundraising goal at the end of June.

A wave of support surrounded this inspired group of students, and we could not be more proud of, or humbled by, their appreciation for land protection. Thanks to their swift action and the help of our generous donors, Sibley Farm is saved.

Charged Up on Sunshine

At Mass Audubon’s Joppa Flats Education Center in Newburyport, electric cars can fill up with clean energy produced by solar panels—all at no cost to the driver and with minimal impact on the environment. While a car charges at the “pump,” the driver can visit the education center, walk downtown for lunch, or stroll along the Merrimack River.

“We’re frequently told we have the most beautiful ‘gas’ station,” says Sanctuary Director Bill Gette.

But the beauty of it isn’t just the scenery; it’s the fact that no gasoline is required at electric car charging stations like the one at Joppa Flats. Thanks to innovative technology, vehicles such as the Chevy Volt and the Nissan Leaf are able to run on renewable energy, which translates to zero tailpipe emissions.

To monitor the center’s electricity use, Joppa Flats has two meters—one that tracks how much electricity the photovoltaic panels are producing and another that tracks electricity consumption.

“When the power grid meter starts turning backwards, that’s when we know that Joppa Flats is a net producer of electricity,” says Gette. “On a sunny day, we actually produce a surplus of electricity that our neighbors can use.”

“Mass Audubon is trying to demonstrate sustainable practices in as many ways as possible,” explains Gette. “This charging station is another way to lead by example.”

And who can go wrong with a free fill-up?

Accessible Interpretation

Making sure that our wildlife sanctuaries are welcoming and accessible is a top priority at Mass Audubon. It's why we continue to create all-persons trails, provide interpretive learning materials, and develop programming that empowers people of all abilities to explore nature.

So when Toward Independent Living and Learning (TILL), a group that serves individuals with disabilities to ensure they lead full and active lives, was looking for a place to hold their annual April Madness field trip, Broadmoor Wildlife Sanctuary in Natick seemed like a natural fit.

Soon after on a snowy day in March, Broadmoor hosted the event, which is designed to encourage TILL group home residents to participate in new experiences. After exploring an all-persons trail with the help of sanctuary staff, group members received Mass Audubon "Passports to Nature" and were challenged to visit at least one other wildlife sanctuary, where they would have the passport stamped.

Not only was the field trip a hit, but word of the challenge quickly spread. Soon residents from TILL's 48 group homes were inspired to head out across the state. All tallied, they paid 220 visits to other Mass Audubon sanctuaries.

John Stevens, TILL's Director of Special Projects, summed up the experience. "Thanks to Broadmoor, this has been one of our most successful contests, and it inspired more interest than any other site we've visited. We will always remember this year of April Madness."

The Future of Camp

From its start in 1950 as a two-week retreat for 40 campers, Mass Audubon's overnight camp, Wildwood, has grown in many ways.

For starters, Wildwood's location changed three times before moving to its permanent home at the Monadnock Conservation Center in Rindge, New Hampshire, in 2001. And programming has expanded over the last five years to accommodate more than 600 campers each summer. Much of this success can be attributed to the support of dedicated camp directors and Mass Audubon leadership (most notably, President Laura Johnson).

By nurturing respect for our natural world, we strive to inspire tomorrow's environmental leaders.

And yet, what makes Wildwood a unique, memorable, summer experience has remained virtually unchanged. Hands-on discovery and investigation of the natural world remain at the heart of what we do, and camp remains a place for creating real connections—where cell phone and computers are off-limits, but habitat explorations, lazy days on the waterfront, and making friends around the campfire are encouraged.

In an era when finding time to connect with nature is increasingly difficult, creating these meaningful experiences with kids in the outdoors has never been more important. Wildwood alums have told us about the positive impact camp has had in their lives, how their future career paths were influenced, and ways that their environmental ethics were shaped.

Which is why, 60 years later, our roots remain unchanged. By nurturing a greater respect for our natural world, we strive to inspire tomorrow's environmental leaders.

A Community for Conservation

In the spirit of an old-fashioned barn raising, more than 200 volunteers from the Pittsfield area gathered at Mass Audubon's Canoe Meadows Wildlife Sanctuary last September to construct a pavilion for the site's Community Gardens. The striking new post-and-beam structure provides shelter for gardeners and serves as a space for programs, picnics, and field trips.

Volunteers included Pittsfield's own Boy Scout Troup 1 and local contractors, while generous local business partners such as SABIC Innovative Plastics, Berkshire Bank, and General Dynamics Advanced Information Systems provided monetary donations and employee volunteers. Other community organizations, including Pittsfield Garden Tour and Berkshire Taconic Community Foundation's Green Pastures Fund, pitched in to provide financial support.

When the pavilion was finished, the group went on to make further enhancements to the Pittsfield sanctuary. In the spirit of Mass Audubon's ongoing efforts to increase accessibility for all audiences, volunteers constructed raised garden beds and bird nesting boxes, installed new bike racks and outhouses, cleared trails, and refurbished the wildlife observation building.

"It would have taken us years to complete all this work on our own," notes Sanctuary Director René Laubach. "We are tremendously grateful to our community volunteers who were willing to roll up their sleeves to make all these visitor improvements possible. Mass Audubon values its relationships with residents, public-spirited businesses, and the community in which it works to help residents make stronger connections to the natural world."

From Storefront to Sanctuary

Today, Worcester is the bustling heart of central Massachusetts—with more than 180,000 residents.

It might come as a surprise that Worcester is often touted as a green place to live. But in fact, more than 52 public parks and several major conservation areas and hiking trails can be found within city limits. Of course, that's today. Flash back to 1985 when the housing market was booming and much of the city's remaining open spaces were disappearing, and you might not believe this could be possible. That's when Worcester native Deb Cary was hired to run Mass Audubon's new Central Massachusetts Advocacy Office in the city's downtown.

"Deb was just a force of nature," recalls Greater Worcester Land Trust President Allen Fletcher. "She quickly made many connections, meeting with longtime members, city officials, and civic leaders to develop an action plan that addressed the region's most pressing issues."

It wasn't long before Cary (pictured above with Mass Audubon Board member Dick Chute) established what is now Broad Meadow Brook Conservation Center and Wildlife Sanctuary (and the permanent home of the Central Massachusetts Advocacy Office) at the site of an old horse farm. Working hand in hand with local partners like the Greater Worcester Land Trust and the Blackstone River Coalition, she has teamed up with Mass Audubon's Advocacy Department to conserve land and tackle many issues over the years—from fighting suburban sprawl with the organization's Shaping the Future of Your Community program to advocating for nature in the classroom.

Thanks to a vision and dedication that began in a Main Street storefront 25 years ago, the nature of Worcester is here to stay.

Original Advocates

In the late 19th century, Harriet Hemenway and Minna Hall successfully—and against all odds—helped bring about the end of the feather trade. At a time when birds were being slaughtered wholesale for women's fashion, these two Boston society women (known today as the founding mothers of environmental activism) persuaded more than 900 women to join their cause. Soon after, their "little bird club," as it was referred to by members of Congress, became the Massachusetts Audubon Society and influenced environmental conservation throughout America.

Our efforts to shape policies that protect the environment reflect the passion and commitment of our original advocates.

Knowing that success would depend as much on social pressure as legislation, Hemenway and Hall carried their fight from the parlors of Beacon Hill to the halls of Congress. By 1897, Massachusetts led legislative action by becoming the first state in the nation to outlaw trade in wild bird feathers. Not long after, the federal government passed the Lacey Act, which, coupled with additional state laws, resulted in the demise of the plume trade.

From its influential beginnings, and throughout the recent tenure of its first female president, Mass Audubon has honored its heritage by advocating for the nature of Massachusetts and educating the public about its legislative initiatives. Today, our efforts to shape policies that protect the environment for the benefit of future generations reflect the passion and commitment of our original advocates.

Community Preservation in Action

It's in towns such as Bridgewater where the Community Preservation Act (CPA) demonstrates its far-reaching potential. Enacted by the state legislature in 2000 with the help of Mass Audubon, the CPA is a smart-growth funding tool that helps communities preserve open space and historic sites, create affordable housing, and develop outdoor recreational facilities. In Bridgewater alone, it's helped to:

- protect a Colonial-era homestead and adjoining conservation land;
- replace a decrepit chain-link fence at a pre-Civil War cemetery with a historically authentic wrought iron fence; and
- construct softball fields for young female athletes.

"The emphasis is on community and preservation," says Pete Colombotos, a former member of the town Community Preservation Committee.

"But it's as much about municipal health and economic opportunity."

Before CPA, there was no steady funding source for preserving and improving a community's character and quality of life. Funding comes from a locally voted property tax surcharge (to to 3 percent) and matching state support.

In 2012, the CPA was updated to include increased funding and a provision that allows communities to use funds to fix up existing parks and recreational facilities—something especially important for cities that have little or no open space.

"Since 2001, 42 percent of Massachusetts' cities and towns have adopted the CPA. More than $2 billion has been spent on historic rehabilitation; more than 4,000 affordable housing units have been built; and 15,000 acres of open space have been protected," notes Mass Audubon's Director of Public Policy and Government Relations, Jack Clarke. "The CPA benefits both people and wildlife in the true tradition of Mass Audubon public policy advocacy."

Land Protection Summary

Mass Audubon permanently protects 35,000 acres of land across Massachusetts, providing important opportunities for people to experience the wonders of nature firsthand, while also safeguarding a wide range of habitats and native species. This year, with the support of generous individuals, families, businesses, communities, and public and private partners, we protected more than 800 acres across Massachusetts. A special thanks to key partner organizations and municipalities, which are listed here in bold.

Purchases of Sanctuary Land

	Acres	Municipality	Sanctuary
Lily Pad Realty Trust	10.0	Groton	Rocky Hill

Almost completely surrounded by Mass Audubon-owned land, this property has been a priority for protection since the acquisition of Rocky Hill Wildlife Sanctuary in 2007. It adds more than 800 feet of shoreline frontage adjacent to Long Pond, providing beautiful water views and access from the sanctuary. The land has been identified as Core Habitat by the state's Natural Heritage and Endangered Species Program BioMap2 project.

Josiah and Carol Ann Fisk	74.3	New Salem, Orange, Wendell	Whetstone Wood
----------------------------------	-------------	-----------------------------------	-----------------------

Adjacent to our Whetstone Wood Wildlife Sanctuary, this property consists of two completely wooded parcels that are identified as high priority for protection, and are mapped as BioMap2 Critical Natural Landscape and Living Waters Critical Supporting Watershed. Conservation of this land was critical to building a protected wildlife corridor between the sanctuary and the Department of Conservation and Recreation (DCR) Quabbin Watershed lands to the southeast.

Oak Knoll Realty Trust	77.1	Rowley	Rough Meadows

Mass Audubon played a lead role in securing this land by raising purchase funds from private donors and NOAA, and by working with the Town of Rowley, Essex County Greenbelt Association, and the Commonwealth's Department of Conservation and Recreation. The property, which is adjacent to the Parker River/Plum Island Sound and is part of the Great Marsh ecosystem, is the largest salt marsh complex north of Long Island and was identified as high priority for protection. Made up of a mixture of salt marsh and coastal oak woodland communities, tidal creeks, and estuaries, it is located within a state-designated Area of Critical Environmental Concern and is designated as BioMap2 and Living Waters Core Habitat.

Patterson Family	50.0	Barre	Rutland Brook

These 50 acres have been rated one of the highest priorities for protection at Rutland Brook Wildlife Sanctuary for many years. Securing this property—which is located at the narrowest part of the sanctuary—prevents intrusion by development on the sanctuary core. Its high-quality habitats range from steep, boulder-strewn slopes, to gently rolling terrain, to level flats occupied by wooded swamp and open marsh. Our thanks to the East Quabbin Land Trust for its assistance and to the Town of Barre, which holds a conservation restriction (CR) on the property.

This land is part of the Sibley and Warner Farms Protection Project, a yearlong partnership effort with the Greater Worcester Land Trust, Common Ground Land Trust, the Town of Spencer, and the Commonwealth to acquire the 350-acre property immediately west and upstream of the Burncoat Pond Wildlife Sanctuary. The southern 25 acres of open field and woodland were retained by Mass Audubon for addition to the sanctuary and will provide a new, more accessible main entrance to the sanctuary and the adjoining Sibley Farm conservation area.

Gifts of Sanctuary Land

	Acres	Municipality	Sanctuary
Ledlie Woolsey	5.0	Petersham	Rutland Brook

This generous bequest protects a beautiful hillside field with wonderful views of the Swift River Valley. The gift completes an extraordinary lifetime record of conservation giving and accomplishment by John and Ledlie Woolsey that includes large portions of our Rutland Brook Wildlife Sanctuary and conservation restrictions on their home farm in Petersham.

Purchase of Conservation Restrictions

	Acres	Municipality	Sanctuary
Josiah and Carol Ann Fisk	27.1	New Salem	Whetstone Wood

This CR protects a small organic farm, stream, and forested area that are part of a larger property that was divided for conservation purposes (the balance of which was purchased outright by Mass Audubon for addition to the Whetstone Wood Wildlife Sanctuary). It helps build a protected wildlife corridor from the sanctuary to DCR's Quabbin Watershed lands to the southeast.

Gifts of Conservation Restrictions

	Acres	Municipality	Sanctuary
Beacon Ocean Shore L.P.	22.9	Marshfield	Daniel Webster

The land protected by this CR was identified as a priority for protection because it is identified as Biomap2 Core Habitat, contains rare species habitat, and links the sanctuary to other land that Mass Audubon is actively working to protect. The Town of Marshfield requested that Mass Audubon accept this CR as mitigation for development adjacent to the site.

Western Massachusetts 30.0 Agawam Electric Company

Western Massachusetts Electric Company (WMECO) donated this CR as part of its mitigation package for impacts of its transmission system upgrade, known as the Greater Springfield Reliability Project. The land protected by this CR contains a major wetlands replication site and is classified as BioMap2 Core Habitat and Priority Habitat for Rare Species.

Western Massachusetts 34.9 Agawam Electric Company

As with the aforementioned WMECO CR, this CR was donated by the company as part of a mitigation package. The land protected by this CR—a mix of high-quality woodlands and wetlands—contains the habitat of two rare species and is classified as BioMap2 Core Habitat and Priority Habitat for Rare Species.

Land Protected by Mass Audubon within the Past 12 Months

Acres directly protected by Mass Audubon	363.4
Acres protected through assistance to other organizations/agencies	445.3
Total Acres Protected within the Past 12 Months	808.7

Ledlie Woolsey 7.1 Petersham Rutland Brook

This generous gift adds acreage to the Woolsey family's preexisting 169-acre CR. It protects a hillside field that is a prominent part of the landscape along North Main Street in Petersham and also serves as the setting for what the family refers to as the "law library" (the former town hall of the Town of Prescott, which was moved here in the 1930s by Judge John M. Woolsey when construction of the Quabbin Reservoir began).

Land Protected via Conservation Assists to Other Organizations and/or Agencies

	Acres	Municipality	Sanctuary
Northeastern University	120.0	Ashland	Waseeka

Mass Audubon assisted the Town of Ashland in negotiating a land purchase agreement and raising the necessary state and CPA funds to protect this property (known as Warren Woods). Conservation of this land fulfills the last opportunity to complete a contiguous corridor of highly important conservation land, including Waseeka Wildlife Sanctuary and land protected by Mass Audubon-held CRs.

Sibley Farm 325.3 Spencer Burncoat Pond

Conservation of this land (now owned by the Greater Worcester Land Trust) is the result of a yearlong partnership effort with the Greater Worcester Land Trust, Common Ground Land Trust, the Town of Spencer, and the Commonwealth. The 350-acre property lies immediately west and upstream of our Burncoat Pond Wildlife Sanctuary. Some of its now-permanently protected conservation assets include a section of the Mid-State Trail, scenic views, high-quality agricultural fields, and an extensive wetlands complex that feeds through a series of beaver ponds and wooded swamps to Burncoat Pond.

Land Under Mass Audubon Stewardship as of June 30, 2012

Barnstable Great Marsh: A Living Legacy

When Walter and Alida Greeley came to Mass Audubon looking for a way to honor the memory of their son, Walter, Jr., they never dreamed they'd be part of a story that involved joining a land protection legacy, opening a wildlife sanctuary, and reuniting with old friends.

The story begins in 1971 with a gift of land from the Chase family, whose property abutted that of longtime Barnstable resident and avid conservationist Georgia Ferguson. Upon her passing in 1998, Mrs. Ferguson left 78 acres to Mass Audubon. In addition to this generous offering, she instilled a strong conservation ethic in her sons, George and Hugh, whose partnership with Mass Audubon would prove to be invaluable.

Thus, Barnstable Great Marsh Wildlife Sanctuary was born. Still, for all its beauty, the wildlife sanctuary lacked a natural entry point and trails, and for years was not prepared for public visitation. That would all change this year, when George Ferguson and the Greeley family made it possible to add an adjoining 8-acre parcel through an incredibly generous bargain sale and in-memoriam donation.

With this additional land, we have been able to add easy public access and a trail system, completing the long-anticipated sanctuary. And, as a welcome surprise, former friends George Ferguson and Walter Greeley were reunited through the process.

The inspiring commitment of these families has allowed us to embark on a new story—Barnstable Great Marsh, Mass Audubon's 53rd wildlife sanctuary.

“The inspiring commitment of these families has allowed us to embark on a new story.”

Treasurer's Report

The health of the Mass Audubon economy is determined by extensive planning, strong partnerships between the staff and Board of Directors, and a commitment to delivering on our mission in a meaningful way that engages members, volunteers, donors, and program participants. I am pleased to report that these combined efforts have once again resulted in the continued financial growth and stability of our organization in FY 2012.

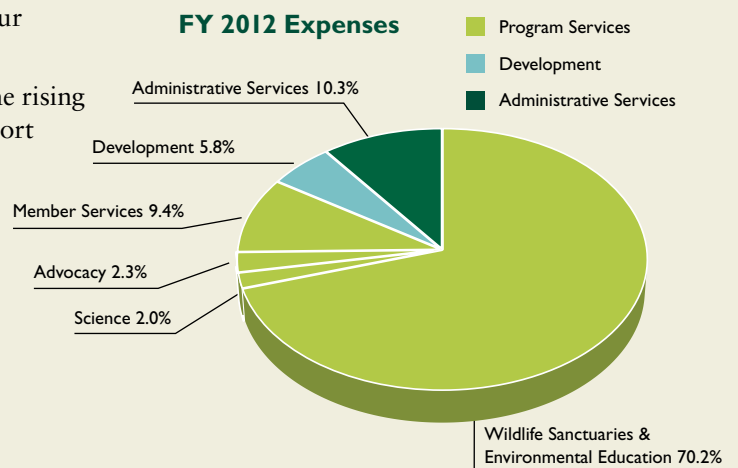

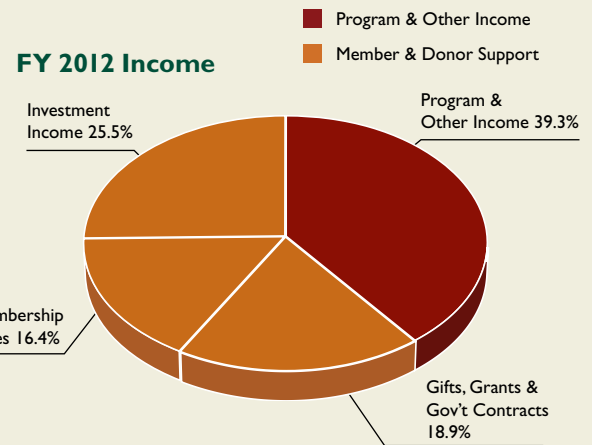

FY 2012 was another year of financial success. Membership income reached its highest ever, thanks to the continued loyalty and confidence of our esteemed members. Program income also reached a new record and reflects our determination to provide participants with the very best and most enjoyable learning opportunities possible. Thanks to the generosity of individual and institutional funders, income from gifts, grants, and government contracts also was robust. Finally, our investment income remains strong, thanks to the prudent management of our endowment, guided by the Board of Directors.

While we faced significant financial pressures this year due to the rising costs of health care and other expenditures, we are proud to report that we kept expenses in line with our budget. It is especially gratifying to report a small overall surplus at the end of the year.

With gratitude to everyone who has supported and helped sustain Mass Audubon this year,

Jeffrey F. Peters, Treasurer

This includes the book value of 29,664 acres of land in 90 communities, as well as buildings, structures, property equipment, vehicles, furnishings, and fixtures at more than 40 sites.

Al Bauman and Mary Garnish

For four years, Al Bauman and Mary Garnish have co-chaired Pleasant Valley Wildlife Sanctuary's very successful "Crickets, Critters, and Cocktails" annual fundraiser. Their creativity, energy, and sense of fun have helped raise much-needed funds and introduced countless people to the wonders of our Berkshire sanctuaries.

"We do this for the fun, for sure—but mainly for the mission," says Al. "Our passion for this special place makes us want to share it with everyone."

Margaret Robinson

As chair of the Campaign for Broadmoor Advisory Committee, Margaret Robinson has worked tirelessly to raise the funds needed to renovate the Natick wildlife sanctuary's Saltonstall Nature Center. Along the way, her leadership has been indispensable and her enthusiasm contagious.

"I never thought of myself as a leader, but the Broadmoor campaign was so compelling, it inspired me to stretch my wings and take on new challenges," says Robinson. "I can't wait to welcome people to the new building next year!"

Massachusetts Cultural Council

The Massachusetts Cultural Facilities Fund supports building projects undertaken by our state's nonprofit cultural sector. These grants provide an economic boost to organizations that already add so much to the quality of life of the Commonwealth's residents.

"We were delighted to fund renovations to Ipswich River Wildlife Sanctuary's visitor center that provide improved access and a more welcoming venue. This investment further strengthens Mass Audubon's ability to connect with thousands of families who visit the sanctuary every year."

Anita Walker, Executive Director of the Massachusetts Cultural Council.

Mike O'Connor

Mike O'Connor, owner of the Bird Watcher's General Store in Orleans, is a legend in the birding community. Respected for his wildlife expertise and unique brand of humor, he has been a friend, advisor, and supporter of Wellfleet Bay Wildlife Sanctuary for decades. And he's not in it just for the birds.

"Sure, Mass Audubon protects birds—but ultimately the citizens of Massachusetts and beyond are the true beneficiaries of their efforts to protect the state's most critically endangered habitat," says O'Connor.

"These important areas were saved by the diligent work of caring and dedicated people."
